

EXCERPT

"They all think I've lost my mind," Eveline said as Wolfe turned the truck down the lane to his tract of land.

"I know what I saw," she repeated to herself.

Something closed over her hand. Something hot, hard and strong. Glancing down, she saw that it was his hand.

She blinked several times before she could raise her eyes to his. He was wearing his hat low over his brow. His eyes drilled into the dirt lane in front of him. But he was holding her hand in a firm grip that told her everything she needed to know about what he believed.

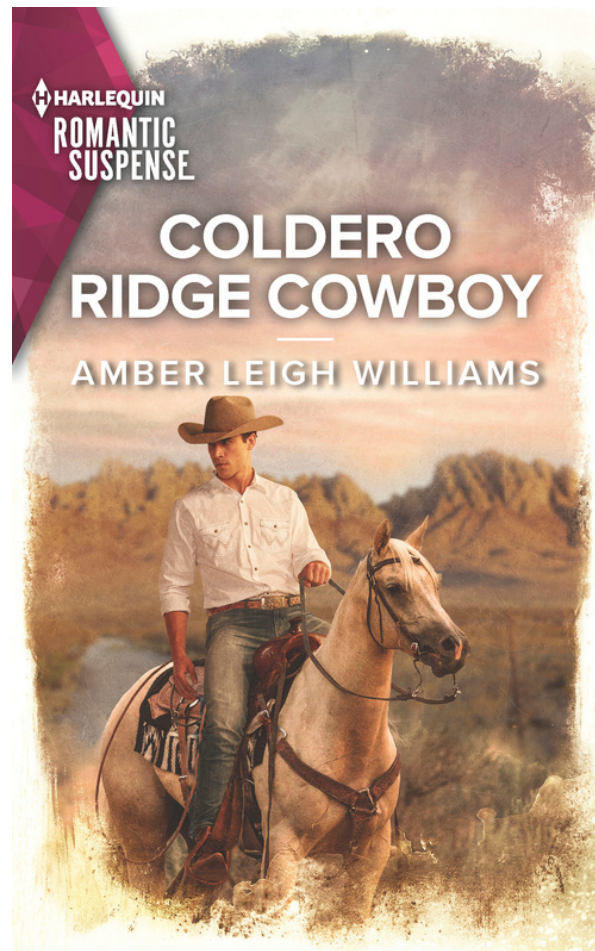

Underneath, she felt charged. That reckless bent she'd been battling made her want to hold and keep him.

Keep him.

You can't keep something wild, her father had told her often. She knew from her father's experience that wild things broke your heart. That was why they were best left alone.

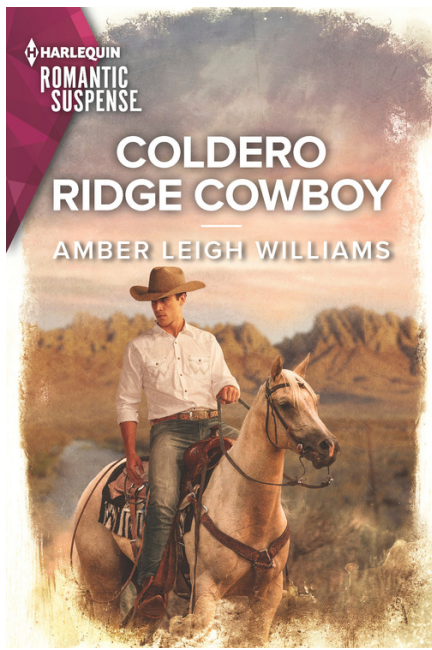

But she could no more take her hand out from under Wolfe's than she could walk away at this point.

She was far too gone and she needed to know...how far was he?
